Case Law for Command Staff and Supervisors

The intricacies of the Fourth Amendment can be difficult to navigate for any law enforcement officer, and it is paramount that those who supervise others have a superior command of case law. When an incident is unfolding and decisions must be made, supervisors and command staff must be confident in what the law permits and why, so they are able to provide clear, legally-defensible direction. This course will serve as an invaluable resource to supervisors and command staff who are charged with resolving issues and answering the search and seizure questions of those in their chain of command.
